Rock

Rock drumming is characterized by its strong backbeat, steady tempo, and use of fills. The bass drum typically plays a steady quarter-note pulse, while the snare drum provides the backbeat on beats two and four. The hi-hats are used to create a rhythmic pattern, and the toms are used for fills and accents.

Jazz

Jazz drumming is known for its syncopated rhythms, use of brushes, and improvisational solos. The bass drum is often played on beats one and three, while the snare drum is used for backbeats and accents. The hi-hats are used to create a rhythmic pattern, and the ride cymbal is used for keeping time. The toms are used for fills and accents.

Funk

Funk drumming is characterized by its strong groove, use of the ghost note, and syncopated rhythms. The bass drum typically plays a steady quarter-note pulse, while the snare drum provides the backbeat on beats two and four. The hi-hats are used to create a rhythmic pattern, and the toms are used for fills and accents. The ghost note is a technique where the drummer plays a very soft hit on the snare drum between the main beats.

Latin

Latin drumming is known for its use of clave rhythms, polyrhythms, and percussion instruments. The clave is a two-bar rhythmic pattern that is used as the foundation for many Latin rhythms. Polyrhythms are rhythms that use two or more different time signatures at the same time. Percussion instruments such as the congas, bongos, and timbales are often used in Latin drumming.
