Tapestries of Hope was founded in 2002 by Maggie Doyne, an American woman who was living in Afghanistan. Doyne was inspired to start the organization after she met a group of Afghan women who were struggling to support their families. Doyne realized that these women had the skills and the desire to work, but they lacked the opportunity.

Tapestries of Hope provides women with the training and resources they need to start their own businesses. The organization offers classes in tapestry weaving, embroidery, and other traditional crafts. Women also receive training in business management and marketing. Once they have completed their training, women are able to sell their products through Tapestries of Hope's online store and at craft fairs.

Tapestries of Hope has trained over 500 women in the art of tapestry weaving. The organization's tapestries have been featured in exhibitions around the world, including the Smithsonian National Museum of Natural History in Washington, D.C., and the Victoria and Albert Museum in London.

The tapestries of Tapestries of Hope are not only beautiful works of art, but they also represent the hope and resilience of the women who made them. These women have overcome tremendous challenges to create a better life for themselves and their families. Their tapestries are a testament to their strength and determination.
