The Papers of Thomas Jefferson Volume 42 presents the correspondence, official papers, and other writings of Thomas Jefferson during the period of 17 October - 31 December 1800. This volume documents Jefferson's election to the presidency, his transition into office, and the early days of his administration.

The volume begins with Jefferson's correspondence from October 17, 1800, in which he discusses the election results and his plans for the transition. He writes to his friend and advisor, James Madison, about the need for a "prudent and temperate" approach to governing, and he expresses his hope that the new administration will be able to "unite all our citizens in the bonds of common interest and affection."

Jefferson's correspondence in the weeks following the election is filled with discussions of cabinet appointments and other important matters of state. He also writes to foreign leaders, such as the French Minister of Foreign Affairs, Talleyrand, and the British Prime Minister, William Pitt, to assure them of his commitment to peace and cooperation.

On March 4, 1801, Jefferson was inaugurated as the third President of the United States. His inaugural address, which is included in this volume, is a powerful statement of his vision for the country. He calls for a government that is "based on the consent of the governed" and that protects the rights of all citizens.

The remainder of the volume documents Jefferson's early days in office. He deals with a number of pressing issues, including the Louisiana Purchase, the Barbary pirates, and the War of 1812. He also works to establish a new national bank and to reform the judiciary.

The Papers of Thomas Jefferson Volume 42 is an essential resource for anyone interested in the life and presidency of Thomas Jefferson. It provides a comprehensive look at his thoughts and actions during a critical period in American history.
